It was opened by the North Midland Railway (NMR) on 1 October 1847, and closed to passengers on 29 March 1952. The station The station was one of seven on the NMR line between and Warwick. It was a single-platform, passing loop design, with the station buildings situated on the down (South) side. A stone ticket office/shelter and cattle dock were located on the up (north) side of the line. Background The station was built by the NMR between 1847 and 1848. During construction, the NMR opened as a temporary station. After two years, the NMR decided to make Atherstone the permanent terminus. It was (5¼ miles or 8.5 km) from Warwick. Between 1847 and 1848, the line was built at a more gradual, steady pace, taking the first year of construction to build only of line. However, after this 1848 to 1850 period, the pace of construction picked up to an average of of line per year. By the time the station was built, it was expected that at least six more years would be needed to complete the line. Destinations The station was not a junction, and goods facilities were limited. The station was a through station, with two trains from calling here. During the May 1906 timetable, the North Midland Railway offered six trains a day in each direction, plus two additional on Sunday. The first was at 09:10 and the last at 20:30 from of which from Warwick. Two trains ran between and of which from Warwick. A fourth train ran on Saturday only, every other day of the week, between and of which from Warwick. The station today Only the trackbed now remains, between Mears Road and the Shrew
